"I know you know about this Guiana thing where they're really expropriating Alcan's both bauxite and plant and this in itself isn't big enough to be that much of a problem, but we're getting now from the government of Surinam and the government of Jamaica some strong appeals that if we don't find some way to get this government to come out with a strong blast against that, that the radical elements are going to push them into trying to do the same sort of thing."

"Neither government wants to do it, and I think they're telling us the truth about that. I've talked to Bill Rogers, I've talked to Matt Samuels, I talked to some other people, and, of course, they've got a hang-up because the Canadian Government won't take a strong stand and Alcan hasn't been able to get them to do anything."

"Well, I've done two other things. I called Peter and told him that I just felt I had to make sure that the President and Henry heard my real concern about this one, which I'm picking up directly from these governments. And, I've also -- I've really screamed at the State Department, Dick, every way I know to scream."

"Now, two other quick things: you may have these figures, but just to give you these figures. We alone have got about 400 million in Surinam. We've got about $200 million in Jamaica, but even more important than that, if we would lose those, this would cut off more than that amount because it cuts off the only bauxite that's available to run the refining plants in this country to supply our smelters. So, this would hit really a body blow at the whole United States aluminum industry, with no way to replace it."
